

Sharing the Light with Others

Are our lives so different that we can only find the light in certain people. Must we look farther than the stars to see the light in others? If our lives are so different, the light we shall see will be different too. It is not the light that makes us different, because the light gives us the strength to go on. As we shall follow this path, we will all see the light together and our lives will be the same, even though we are different in ways we can not describe. Later in life it will not be different, so we must not be confused and turn away, because of the way we see others. We share the light with them by opening our hearts and letting light in. Then the light will be stronger than one person could see alone.

*Humans can find many things they have in common with others, but few realize the depth of that assertion, the extent to which we share a common spiritual heritage that transcends not only individuals or race but even time. That heritage, taken as a piece, is the greatest human strength.
